"Cape Cod, Its People & Their History" - (Henry C. Kittredge - 1930)

Edmund Freeman, of Lynn, Father of the new town of Sandwich, & from England 1635 - lived a year at Lynn - made his way to Plymouth in 1637 & stayed there only long enough to obtain the Governor's consent to start a new settlement at Sandwich. He set out with 10 others, most of them like himself from Lynn, & making his way over the old Indian trail through the woods & arrived at his goal with his axes & his cattle & began to clear land & build houses.

The Governor had authorized him & his companions to take enough land for 60 families, & almost immediately, recruits began to arrive swelling the number of the ten men of Sagus. Twenty or thirty families from Lynn, & some of Plymouth came straggling in during the year that followed Freeman's arrival. Their purpose was to worship God as - to make money!

THE WATSON FREEMAN LINE

In 1690 three citizens of Plymouth bought Clark Island in Plymouth Bay. The island was named for the First Mate of the Mayflower John Clarke who had landed there in 1620 in charge of the exploration party, but it had remained unoccupied except for some Indians who were "protected" there in King Philip's War in 1675 and some smallpox sufferers quarantined there later. Among the purchasers was Elkanah Watson, the grandson of a settler who had come to Plymouth in 1632. About 1676 Elkanah (a biblical name meaning "God-possessed") had married Mercy Bradford, a granddaughter of the Governor, and had four children: John, born 1678, Phoebe 1681, Mercy 1685 and Mary 1688. Elkanah, the Master of a coastal trading vessel, was drowned later in 1690, leaving this widow with a 12 year old son and three little girls. We don't know exactly when but the widow and her daughters removed to the town across the bay called first Nauset then Eastham. Probably she remained in Plymouth long enough to see her son working independently when he was 18 or so. He was a successful young man because he soon bought out the other two owners of Clark Island and founded a Watson family there which owned the island up until recent years and which produced many distinguished members including a Revolutionary hero named Elkanah.

THE WATSON FREEMAN LINE

In the July issue we described how the founder of Sandwich, Edmund Freeman, lived near the present "Saddle and Pilion" grave markers, while his son John in 1650 built a second house just to the west, which was expanded into the present Freeman house where John's descendant, Mrs. Eveline Pratt still lives. The original home burned down in 1650, and John left his new house to his parents and removed to Nauset (later renamed Eastham) where a number of Pilgrims had removed earlier. John's sons, John and Thomas became leading citizens and were founders of Harwich which originally included Brewster. We also saw how the widow Mrs. Elkanah Watson and her three daughters moved to Eastham from Plymouth and bowled over the Freeman family there, the widow marrying John, two daughters marrying sons of John, another daughter a son of Thomas, and later one of the daughters, when widowed, marrying another son of Thomas. The names Elkanah and Watson thereafter reappeared in the Freeman family in every generation as given names. There was one succession of five Watson Freemans, of which Watson III married his cousin Experience Freeman who was born and brought up on the ancestral Sandwich farm. Two of their sons were finally deeded the Sandwich property itself in 1854, which thereby came back into the line of the John Freeman who had first built it. Watson IV had married his cousin Eveline Fessenden (who also was a descendant of one of those romantic Watson-Freeman marriages in Eastham) and had these six children:

Mary Ann (1828-1902) and Charlotte Sever (1831-1898) unmarried.
Watson V (1830-1901) a Custom's official in Boston who married Clara Williams.
Eveline Fessenden (1833-) who married Edward Clark, an architect of Washington, D.C.
Henry Huggeford (1837-1871) who married Louisa Mott
Helen Watson (1839-) who married Leonard Frailey

We will indicate briefly who were the children and grandchildren of each of these marriages, to bring the story up to the present.

1. Watson V and Clara had three girls: Mary Ann (1863-1925), married

IN THE WAY OF EXPANSION — The historic Freeman house, built by the son of one of the founders of Sandwich over 300 years ago, will be the topic of a meeting tomorrow between several town agencies interested in saving the structure. SANDWICH — Where John Freeman built his farmhouse in 1650 there was no way he could know he was building it in the wrong spot

No way at all. He never would have guessed that in the 1980s, his homestead would fall in the path of a giant conveyer system designed to handle millions of tons of coal each year to feed the power plant looming off his back porch

As a result, the town founded by John's father, Edmund Freeman, must deal with the problem of how to save this classic Georgian farmhouse now that the Canal Electric Co. has bought the land on which it sits. The selectmen and town historic groups will take up the question at 7:30 p.m. tomorrow in a public meeting at the Henry T Wing School

Several local historians and residents of this community rich in historic sites claim the farm is a monument to the first settlers and the man who brought them here.

"Sandwich should have a meaningful tribute to the Freeman family," town archivist Russell A. Lovell said "Edmund Freeman brought the first settlers to Cape Cod and founded the first town. It's the only home which has survived from the founder"

Canal Electric recently acquired the property for $158,000 and sold the farmhouse and outbuildings to Paul White and David Allen, two Sandwich residents, for $8,000.

"We bought it because we didn't want to see it bulldozed," Paul White said. "No one else wanted it. We want to see it preserved

All we have in Sandwich is its history," White explained "The same family has lived in this house for nine or ten generations Its value lies in its connection to the town"

The future of the farmhouse is precarious at this point. Several major obstables must be overcome, including the questions of where the building will be relocated and who will pay for the high costs of renovating its deteriorating timbers.

"I'm not sure of the reception we'll get," White said, referring to the possibility of town aid. "There is very little state or federal money available for restoration projects."

"I'm hoping everyone in town will feel that a portion of this farm is theirs," he added. "But the reality of restoring the building means a lot of money."

Channing Hoxie, a member of the town archives center, and George Sutton, who sits on the historic district committee, have asked the selectmen to hold a session to discuss the feasibility of restoring the landmark building.

White said he would like to see the valuable interior preserved as a historic home or a museum
